Dear Nienstaedt,

I was called down here to Washington for service with the Government in mid-January and have been very rushed with my official duties since. Leontief was out of the country until well into February. I delivered your manuscript to him personally, on one of my trips back to Boston in mid-March, urging that he examine it and communicate directly with you.

I am pleased that you got an interested reaction from J. M. Clark and trust that this correspondence will prove fruitful.

Best regards.
